

WHEN MAYOR THOMAS SWANN DEDICATED DRUID HILL PARK IN 1860, HE PROCLAIMED:

"We are here today for a noble purpose. We are here to dedicate this park to the whole people — no matter from what remote land... no matter to what sect or religion they belong... no matter in what field of labor... however elevated or however humble. We are here to proclaim equality of rights to all, and to dedicate this park, now and forever, to the people of this great city."

150 years later, 745-acre Druid Hill Park continues to provide the people of Baltimore with a wide variety of opportunities for communing with nature and for social, cultural, and athletic activities. The Park includes the 135-acre Maryland Zoo and 135 acres of woodlands. The third oldest major landscaped public park in the United States, it was purchased by the City in 1860. The park is located at the juncture of the hilly Piedmont Plateau and the gently sloping Coastal Plain.
